

Borrowed Money

A banker called an oilman to his office.

“We loaned you a million dollars to revive your wells, and the wells went dry,” he said.

“Coulda been worse,” the oilman said.

“Then we loaned you another million dollars to drill new wells and they all turned out to be dry holes.”

“Coulda been worse,” the oilman said.

“Then we loaned you another million to buy new drilling equipment, and it all broke down.”

“Coulda been worse,” the oilman said.

“I’m tired of hearing that!” snapped the banker.

“How could it have been worse?”

The oilman replied, “Coulda been my money.”

Author Unknown